TRAVEL + LEISURE

Life in the Shadow of the Andes

Chile is a gorgeous spectacle. Spaghetti-thin, up to half of this country's slim width is covered by the stratospheric Andes. Glaciers calve. Penguins mix with flamingos. Vineyards knit mild valleys into a neat green patchwork. Sharp spikes of snow-capped rock seem to bite into the sky. It's hard to capture how it feels to be wrapped in raw wilderness or to scan the expansive pampas from the porch of a secluded estancia. On tour, you'll experience the awesome variety of nature as well as meeting the fascinating array of local cultures along the way. On a series of fascinating walks, meet the urbanites of Santiago, vintners in the fertile Maipo Valley, the hardy islanders of Chiloé and, of course, the gauchos who ride the pampas. North to south, mountaintop to seashore, you'll get a carefully curated up-close look at this vast and varied country.

Santiago / Maipo Valley

Begin in Santiago and what a city it is. Never have skyscrapers had to fight so hard to look tall. After all, snow-capped Andes ring the city and dwarf the manmade peaks. Take a guided walk in the historic center where grand Spanish Colonial architecture is the rule. Then you're off to the nearby vineyard-laced Maipo Valley and accept an invitation to a renowned local winery. Arrive on foot as you stroll through the picture-perfect vineyard to a fine lunch that awaits you at the estate. With more than 200 years of history, you'll take an insightful tour of the winery, learning first-hand about the wine-making process. Pause to sip some locally produced varietals, including the exceptional Cabernet Sauvignon.

Afterward, get an up-close view of the property, as your hosts show off their whole operation from the vines to bottling. (One of our most vivid images of Chile is how the meticulous geometry of the vineyards contrasts with the jagged, mountainous backdrop.) During your pairings and tastings, you'll hear tales of this industrious and proud wine region while taking in the beautiful views around you. Raise your glass for a toast and say "salud", which is cheers in Spanish.

Lake District

A morning flight takes you south to Puerto Montt, the gateway to Vicente Perez Rosales National Park. Just like always in Chile, the mountains loom, only here the environment is a temperate rainforest...and the terrain is an incredible mix of natural landmarks. You'll drive through vast fields of black volcanic rock spewed by Osorno Volcano. At Petrohué Falls, marvel as the whitewater plunges through narrow channels in the basalt dam that an eruption threw across the river. Your morning walk is across the black lava sands that cover the ground near Todos los Santos Lake. The photo opportunities here are fantastic as you soak in the views.

This afternoon, you'll approach the Osorno Volcano on foot at eye level. Its steep-sided cone is about as perfectly symmetrical as they come. (The most recent eruption was in 1869.) The upper slopes are covered in glaciers. On an exploratory walk on the lower slopes, you'll get a close-up look at the lava formations, plants and animals that have slowly retaken the area over the last century and a half. Not to be missed: the reflection of Osorno in the smooth sapphire surface of Llanquihue Lake. The whole day is a fascinating look at the many ways volcanic activity shapes the environment.

Chiloé Island

Chiloé is a world unto itself. South America's second largest island, it's geographically close to the mainland, but home to a very different culture. You'll arrive via a ferry ride across the Chacao Channel, home to sea lions and a tremendous number of seabirds. On a beach walk, see the Islotes de Puñihuil. These three rocky knobs jut out of the sea near to shore, and they are the only known shared breeding site for Humboldt and Magellanic penguins. You see the endangered birds up close on a boat ride that circles the islets.

Midday, join our friends Maria Luisa and her family for a truly 'Only with Classic Journeys' experience. The curanto is a social event built around a feast of shellfish, meat and potatoes that is cooked in a covered pit. If it feels something like a luau, that's because this food tradition is believed to have migrated across the Pacific from Polynesia by way of Easter Island. You get a unique look at how the meal is assembled from mussels, smoked pork and some of the 150 kinds of potatoes that are native to the island. We love it because the whole afternoon is a great time with this typical Chilota family. And the eating is very fine, too!

Patagonia

Today you'll venture to Puerto Natales, flying into the gateway to Patagonia. Situated dramatically on Señoret Channel, the town was founded as a port for the sheep industry in a region called Ultima Esperanza (Last Hope). This is the ideal place to base explorations that include the famed Torres del Paine National Park, the World's 8th Natural Wonder.

Join your guide for a walk with spectacular views of Última Esperanza Sound and north to the Cerro Benitez peaks of the Cerro Toro formation and the Cordillera Manuel Señoret. Late, you'll relax over a dinner of the country's famous beef or lamb and vegetable specialties.

Torres Del Paine

This is the morning for a hearty breakfast because the day to come is all about exploring the wilds of Patagonia. You're headed to Torres del Paine. The torres - soaring, spikey "towers" of granite carved by ancient glaciers - are one of the signature sights of Chile. You're headed to a part of the park that was declared a Biosphere Reserve by UNESCO. You'll love walking on the Sierra Cañadon Macho trail because it puts you in the midst of everything the park has to offer. You'll get the opportunity to see pampas, (grasslands), Magellanic forests, waterfalls such as Paine Cascade and the famous Salto Grande, glaciers, and a view of the snowcapped Campo de Hielo Sur (the Southern Ice Field). At the top of the trail, the views of the snow-capped mountains are stupendous, and you can take your time to absorb it all as you linger over a picnic lunch that is the perfect break in the walks and explorations today.

As you make your way back down the footpath, keep an eye out for local wildlife. This is the natural habitat of the guanaco, long-legged rheas, endangered Andean deer, and the Andean condor, and you're likely to spot them during your walk. Small Andean Foxes are sometimes seen in the park scampering along the trails as well. The nearby lagoons are breeding and feeding grounds for a variety of birds, and as you follow the lead of your expert local guide, they will point out the beautiful flora and fauna. Pause together at vantage points and overlooks for the best views and to discuss the geological features you see along the way.

Patagonia Gaucho Experience

Your days in the mountains could leave you with the feeling that it would be nearly impossible to live in this region of Patagonia. In fact, there's a hardy population who live and work here, and you'll meet them today. You're off to a working estancia, a vast ranch where the sheep, cattle and horses drastically outnumber the gauchos who tend them. You'll get an 'only with Classic Journeys' firsthand look at life on the pampas. If you like, you can climb into the saddle to join the gauchos for a look at the land on horseback, or you can join your guide to explore the property on foot and at eye level.

Either way, you'll see how the gauchos go about their work as you watch them shear sheep and the way they team up with shepherd dogs to control their flocks in the wild terrain. You'll especially love this time at the estancia because it is an unforgettable glimpse into how man and nature coexist in ways that are unimaginable back home. Midday, enjoy a gaucho barbecue with the centerpiece of a succulent lamb that is grilled over open fires. It's a traditional feast that perfectly captures the rustic, natural spirit of the day.

DAY 7 »

Grey Glacier

This morning, get ready for a completely different view of Torres del Paine. At the entry to the park, the Serrano River, whose waters are intensely turquoise, signals the theme of the day: water, both liquid and frozen. Start with a cinematic walk into Lengas Forest, which is filled with ancient beech trees that tower above you and filter the sunlight down around you. The forest floor is covered with a lush carpet of mosses, ferns, and lichens, adding a velvety green layer to the scenery. As you follow this forested footpath, you'll learn about the dramatic landscape while getting the opportunity to spot local wildlife. Keep your eyes open (and your camera ready) to spot the Andean condor soaring overhead. Listen for the resonant calls of the Magellanic woodpecker echoing through the forest. This remarkable bird is among the largest woodpeckers in the world and can be heard drumming on the trees.

As you approach the shores of Lago Grey, the forest begins to give way to breathtaking views of the shimmering glacial lake and the immense Grey Glacier in the distance. The glacier, with its azure hues and massive ice formations, is a sight to behold. Nearby, recently calved ice floes float in the lake fed by Grey Glacier, and with an experienced captain at the helm, take to the water for an unforgettable boat ride that puts you just a short distance from the sheer face of the glacier. You've heard how glaciers carve landscapes, move mountains and scour out fjords, but it's only from this perspective that you can truly appreciate their awesome scale and power. Lounge on the deck — maybe with a pisco sour chilled by glacial ice — and take it all in. After your memorable cruise, disembark for a walk along the pristine shoreline. Along the way, reflect on the diverse ecosystems you have seen today, from forest to glacier to beach, allowing you to appreciate the natural wonders of Patagonia.
